

Classics and Ancient Civilizations (Ma)

VU University Amsterdam - Faculteit der Geesteswetenschappen (Let) - M Classics & Ancient Civilizations - 2014-2015

From September 2012 VU University and the University of Amsterdam offer a combined graduate study in Classics and Ancient Civilizations. It is organized within the Amsterdam Centre for Ancient Studies and Archaeology (ACASA) that was founded by both universities and offers several kinds of programme relating to the study of Antiquity. In ACASA you can choose a wide variety of courses so that you can specialize as classicist, archaeologist, ancient historian, assyriologist or graduate in an interdisciplinary programme.

The Master's curriculum Classics and Ancient Civilizations consists of three programmes: Classics, Ancient History and Ancient Studies. Each programme has its own core courses and in addition you may choose from a wide variety of courses offered by both universities, that suit best your specialization. All courses are taught in English.

Master Classics & Ancient Civilizations, Programme Ancient Studies

Ancient Studies is an interdisciplinary master's programme training in problem-oriented research using all kinds of data: textual and archaeological, historical sources as studied by historians, classicists, assyriologists, students of Old and New Testament studies and philosophy. The programme distinguishes five different specializations. With the students of the Ancient History programme most students follow the core course on "Great Debates in Ancient Historical Studies". In addition you choose courses from the rich amount of courses which best fit your bachelor study: ancient history, classics, archaeology, assyriology, theology or philosophy. Consult the study advisor or a staff member for assistance.

You can opt for five specializations:

- a. Archaeological and Historical Approach
- b. Latin Language and Culture
- c. Greek Language and Culture
- d. Babylonian-Assyrian Language and Culture
- e. Ancient Thought: From Plato to Augustine

Master Classics & Ancient Civilizations, Programme Classics

This programme is the natural sequel to the Bachelor study of Classics; in fact, a Bachelor in Classics, with both Greek and Latin, is obligatory for admittance to this specialization. There are two specializations: Linguistic and narratological approaches to Classical texts, and Intertextuality and Reception. Within your own specialization you follow three courses; in addition to these courses, you can choose from courses of the other specialization in Classics and from courses in Ancient history, Archaeology, Theology and Philosophy. For the first specialization, the staffs at the VU and the UvA include specialists in the field of narratology, discourse linguistics, historical linguistics, and the technique of commenting and editing texts; for the second specialization, the staffs cover the field of intertextuality and reception from Classical Antiquity via Late Antiquity, Middle Ages and Renaissance up to contemporary Dutch literature.

You can opt for two specializations:

- a. Linguistic and Narratological Approaches to Classical Texts
- b. Intertextuality and Reception

Master Classics & Ancient Civilizations, Programme Ancient History

This programme is for graduates in History and Classics with special interest in ancient history, that is the history of the Mediterranean World and Western Asia in Antiquity. The expertise at the VU University is particularly invested in the study of the interaction of the Greek and Near Eastern civilizations in the Achaemenid and Hellenistic periods. Another topic is the study of Greek elite culture in the Roman empire. The University of Amsterdam courses concern gender studies (position and culture of Roman women), Roman city life, the Near East in the first centuries AD and the rise of Christianity. The core course is "Great debates in ancient historical studies" which introduces the student into the main issues of modern research and may trigger further research for a master's thesis. It is taught by both VU and University of Amsterdam staff members.

You can opt for two specializations, but can also choose a free study path:

- a. Confrontation between East and West
- b. Religion and Culture

Programme components:

- Master Classics & Ancient Civilizations, Programme Ancient History, Specialization Confrontation East and West

Course content

In ancient Greek poleis, the gods were an integral part of society. Although radical thinkers occasionally toyed with atheism in thought experiments, the presence of the gods was simply a given in daily life. From major gods like Demeter to local healing heroes, each had needs and desires, moods and sympathies, just like mortals; but without mortality to put a check on the gods' whims, those mortals had to spend a significant portion of their time and resources on keeping the gods satisfied.

This basic fact will be the starting point for our study of classical Athenian democracy. How did the presence of the gods affect the development of democratic ideology and practice? In this course, we will study a variety of historical, literary and archeological sources to trace how religion shaped the democratic institutions and politics of classical Athens.

Course objective

1. Discussion of important issues concerning the formation of Jewish identities.
2. Study of primary sources (Bible, Second Temple Period and Early Rabbinic passages) in their historical contexts.
3. Reading of a selection of secondary literature.

Course content

The course aims at introducing students to recent scholarly discussions concerning Early Jewish literature as well as Jewish identity construction. It will start with a discussion how "origins" of a religion can be conceived and then focus on the plurality of Judaism in the Second Temple period. It will also deal with the formation of Rabbinic Judaism and the issue of the "parting of the ways" of Jews and Christians. Relevant primary sources will be discussed in detail. The course also aims at improving students' ability to analyze complex scholarly discussions and subsequently formulate their own position therein.

Form of tuition

This course will have the format of a seminar, which means that active participation of students is essential. The instructor will give feedback and additional information by means of lectures (3 hours per week), but a considerable part of the course will be done in collaboration with the students. Students will introduce the readings of the respective week and prepare the discussion in class in oral presentations. The course also includes the oral presentation of a specific topic by students, a brief academic paper as well as the writing of a review on a scholarly monograph related to the topic of the course.

Type of assessment

Assignments every week, oral presentation, short paper and review.

Course reading

Scholarly literature will be available either in the form of a reader or in electronic format. Students have to pay for copyrights. Costs ca. € 50,--.

Entry requirements

Admitted to a MA-programme in Humanities.

Remarks

Knowledge of Biblical Hebrew and/or Greek is recommended but not required. Recommended are recent translations of the primary sources, e.g. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha I-II (ed. J. H. Charlesworth; London: 1983-85); G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls in English (London: 1997).

This module is taught at the UvA by prof.dr. J.W. van Henten (UvA) (UvA subject code 153412056Y). Module registration at the UvA is required.

Course content

The bimillenary celebrations of the death of Rome's first emperor Augustus in 2014 once more illustrated the singular importance of both the historical figure and the culture he both epitomized and created. This course examines Augustus' presence in art, politics and literature from an interdisciplinary perspective, enlisting the contributions of archeologists, historians, philologists and cultural historians.

- 1.Introduction: the synthetic nature of Augustan culture: precedents and afterlife (D.Rijser)
- 2.Augustus: art, architecture, urban design (Gert-Jan Burgers)
- 3.Augustus and the Foundation of Rome (Raphael Hunsucker, RU)

Course objective

- Understanding the development of “biographical approaches” to landscape research in geography and archaeology from 1979 onwards
- Understanding different concepts of authorship and “layeredness” in landscapes
- Knowledge of different geographical, anthropological, historical and archaeological perspectives on the long-term history and temporality of landscapes
- Competence in working with these theoretical concepts in specific case studies, thereby developing interesting and useful narratives for the present-day (public) understanding and transformation of landscapes
- Competence in combining and integrating different sources (archaeological, historical, art historical) in the study of landscapes

Course content

In heritage practices the disciplines which are dealing with culture historical heritage (archaeology, history of architecture and historical geography), are confronted more and more with each others knowledge in cases of advising about management, preservation and reuse of the historical landscape. The term 'landscape biography' can offer a common approach. In the lectures the term will be explained in a theoretical concept and placed in the perspectives of the three disciplines that were mentioned above. Analyzing a number texts the students get acquainted with differing into interpretations of the term and they learn to practice it in a topic that is chosen from their own discipline.

Level	400

Course objective

The course aims to provide students with a critical knowledge and understanding of the theoretical background to burial practices. At the same time it aims to familiarize students with methodologies that focus on the relations between the burial record and the evidence of the living society. On completion of the module students will have acquired a series of analytical tools which enables them to reflect critically on the specific nature of both worlds and on the particularities that combine them or set them apart.

Course content

This seminar is designed to gain insight into the relations between the world of the dead and that of the living focussing on the Mediterranean world in the first millennium BC. Burial practices offering interesting views on the ways the dead were treated will be studied in relation to the material record of the living in order to acquire a better understanding of the ancient societies under study.

Form of tuition

The course consists of 7 weeks of teaching (lectures, seminars and discussions based on assigned readings) with meetings two times a week (2 x 2 hours): Monday, 11.00-13.00, BG13A 0.01A; Thursday, 11.00-13.00, OMHP D1.18B. The first session is scheduled on 27 October, the last session on 11 December.

The course consists of three distinct parts:

1. classes based on assigned literature followed by discussion
2. classes by guest speakers who will lecture on subjects that focus on the relations between the world of the living and the dead, presenting case studies from their own research
3. an assignment for each student in which a specific theme is treated with the application of the theoretical framework discussed during the classes. This has to result in an oral presentation and a written paper before the end of the course.

On Monday: there will be regular classes based upon the assigned literature. The Thursday class will be used for seminars by guest speakers, who will discuss case studies from their own experience. This will be followed by a discussion, based on the presentation of the guest speaker and additional literature. One of the students will introduce the guest-speaker and will preside the discussion.

The student will undertake individual research on a selected case-study, presenting the results in both oral and written form (5000-7500 words excl. literature and illustrations).

More information about the courses and the assignments will be given in the first week of the course.

Type of assessment

Participation in class room discussions, final extended essay

Course reading

Will be made available during the course.

Entry requirements

Course objective

Familiarizing students with various methods and techniques of ceramics research, in relation to theory and practice of the study of production, distribution and use of pottery in various societies of the Mediterranean area, from the Neolithic till recent times (but with the focus from the Bronze Age to the Roman period). On completion of the module students will have acquired a series of analytical tools which enables them to reflect critically on existing work, but also to use ceramic research as part of their own archaeological work, in academia or in field archaeology.

Course content

Pottery is the material most frequently encountered in archaeology research project. It helps dating, inspires thoughts about contacts between areas, and is a starting point for reconstructing social structures and/or their ideological frameworks. By looking at various methods of pottery research (in some specific cases) and their theoretical background, the ways pottery can be used in thinking about aspects of production, distribution and use and meaning will be explored, while at the same time insights and practical tools for hands on study of the material will be taken into account. More specific themes and methods to be treated include: typology, chronology and their problems; techniques and social organization of pottery production and their interconnection; the interaction between producers and consumers of pottery; scientific and anthropological approaches to pottery. All this will be placed in a more general background regarding social and cultural theory on daily material culture and the interaction between materials, objects and people, and the ways these can and cannot be used in archaeology.

Course content

Roman culture was pre-eminently an urban culture. Cities formed the backbone of the Roman Empire; they were the centre of government and the heart of economics, religion and culture. In this course, attention will be paid to theories concerning the Roman city, the process of Romanisation, the discussion of the economic function of cities and, last but certainly not least, to social-cultural aspects of urban life during the Empire. We shall discuss the structure of Roman cities, their architectural organization, public buildings, funerary plots and cemeteries (including rites and usages of sanitary and hygienic kind), the administration of towns, their priesthoods, religious and professional clubs, the role of benefactors (and benefactresses) and the relation between the various sections of the population (the elite, the middle classes and the lower ranks, citizens and foreigners, the free-born and the freedmen and finally, the slaves). We shall mainly deal with the towns of Italy and the western provinces, esp. Spain, Gallia and Northern Africa.

Classical Storytelling: from Theory to Text

Course code	L_AAMAOHS018 ()

Teaching staff	dr. mr. R.J. Allan, dr. L.W. van Gils
Teaching method(s)	Lecture, Seminar
Level	400

Course objective

One of the central text-types of both ancient and modern literature (and society at large) is the story. We constantly tell others what has happened to us or in the world and through these stories try to get a grip on those events. Authors have esthetically developed the narrative to present fictional or factual events and their view on the world. In this course you will 1) be introduced to the most important theoretical concepts that have been devised by narratologists and linguists for analysing narrative texts, and 2) learn how to use them in practice when reading and interpreting narrative texts. At the end of this course you will be fully equipped to do close-readings of a broad range of ancient narrative texts.

Course content

The course consists of lectures and seminars. In the lectures key concepts of narrative theory will be introduced, such as the role of the narrator and his addressee, the narratee, focalization or point of view, the manipulation of time (retardation and acceleration, repetition and omission, foreshadowing and flash-back), description, the structure of narrative and its linguistic underpinning. In the seminars we use these concepts while reading passages from Greek and Latin literature (epic, drama, and especially historiography) and interpretations of those texts. We discuss how these concepts can help us to correct, expand or refine existent interpretations and suggest new ones.

Form of tuition

Weekly lectures and seminars.

Type of assessment

A poster-presentation (i.e. an oral presentation on the basis of a written summary of your argument on a poster). Written exam.

Course reading

Course objective

The student is trained in research skills (phrasing of a research topic, heuristics, reporting) and is capable to use literary and documentary sources.

Course content

Since the establishment of great empires in the Near East of the first millennium BC (the Neo-Assyrian, Neo-Babylonian, Persian, and Hellenistic empires [Alexander the Great, the Seleucids and Parthians]) gradually a multiform society emerged due to military operations, deportations, trade and the foundation of cities. In the empires of Alexander the Great and the Seleucids a great effort was made to spread Greek culture by the foundation of new cities with a core of Greek or Hellenized citizens or by the settlement of Greeks, Macedonians and Hellenized people in ancient oriental cities, like Babylon, Uruk and Susa. In two areas this process can be studied fruitfully thanks to the availability of Greek as well as of indigenous sources: Babylonia and Judea. This allows us to look at the interaction of cultures from both sides. As regards Babylonia a lot of new material has been published recently: <http://www.livius.org> > Babylonian Chronicles.

Form of tuition

Research seminar. It is a combination of lectures and independent research by the students. In a series of lectures theory on integration processes will be presented in an anthropological perspective. Relevant sources in Greek and Akkadian will be read and studied (esp. with research master students in the original languages). In consultation with the students research topics will be formulated about which the students will write a paper.

Type of assessment

Weekly assignments; paper.

Course reading

To be announced.

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course:

(research) Master's programme in Classics and Ancient Civilizations or History .

Students with knowledge of Greek and/or Akkadian can follow extra classes in reading Greek and Akkadian texts in the original languages.

Target group

Students MA and RMA History; Classics and Ancient Civilizations.

Connecting the Ancient Mediterranean: Networks, Globalization and Heritage

Level	400

Course objective

Students who will have successfully completed this course will 1.) have acquired an in-depth knowledge of recent ideas about Mediterranean interconnectivity and of key analytical tools and theoretical concepts that are used to study Mediterranean interconnectivity;

- 2.) have developed the ability to implement these tools, theories and concepts to case studies related to the second and first millennia BC;
- 3.) have developed a clear insight into the long-term history of Mediterranean interconnectivity during the second and first millennia BC;
- 4.) be able to relate these insights to the wider debates about globalization, interculturality and heritage issues.

Course content

The course starts with an introductory lecture that reflects on the historical and cultural definition of the Mediterranean and provides an outline of the historiography of Mediterranean studies, with a focus on developments over the last 20 years. In each of the following seven sessions, we will discuss a set of theoretical concepts on the basis of key literature and a number of case studies. The theoretical issues and case studies are arranged in such a way that they together give a diachronic overview of important phases of interconnectedness (and disconnectedness) in the second- and first-millennium BC Mediterranean. Each week has two sessions. During the first, one of the tutors introduces the topic by discussing relevant theoretical concepts, illustrated with the help of particular archaeological cases. At home you prepare an assignment on the basis of two or three articles or book chapters. This has to result in a short essay of about three pages (max. 1500 words) which you submit at the beginning of the week's second session. During this session we go through the literature that you read in detail and discuss the outcomes of your essay. During the course's last week you will write an essay in which you present your views on long-term developments in Mediterranean interconnectivity, ca. 2000 BC – AD 2000 (max. 3000 words). This final essay takes the form of a review of two recent articles or chapters of a recent book on Mediterranean connectivity; in your essay you go back to what you have read and learned during the course.

Type of assessment

- The weekly written reports aim to assess course objectives 1 and 2. The papers will be judged on the degree they reflect the Monday class and the assigned literature, on their quality/originality and on language and grammar. (30%)
- Group discussion of the written report and participation in the general discussions aim to assess course objectives 1 and 2. The participation will be judged on the degree in which they indicate understanding of the issues at hand (30%)
- The final essay assesses course objectives 3 and 4. It will be judged on the degree to which they show an understanding of the Mediterranean interconnectivity, on the degree to which a coherent argument is formulated and on presentation and grammar (40%).

Course reading

Will be made available during the course.

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course : Archaeology (all three programmes) or Classics and Ancient Civilizations (all three programmes), Historical Geography

Target group

Core course for Master students of Mediterranean archaeology, specialisation 'Mediterranean interconnections'; also accessible for Master students Ancient History, Classics and Ancient Civilisations and Historical Geography.

Remarks

Course objective

- Students are able to read, understand and analyze early Christian literature as well as scholarly discussions related to this material.
- Students can apply what they have learned to a different case study than the ones discussed in class.
- Students have developed their academic skills, more specifically their ability to follow and analyze scientific discussions and to formulate their own position therein.
- Students have also trained their presentation skills.

Course content

This course will be devoted to Early Christian literature from the first and second century CE. Both canonical and extracanonical texts, such as the Acts of Paul and Thecla, the Didache, and the Apocalypse of Peter, will be studied. Apart from an analysis of the source texts, more methodological issues will be discussed as well, including definitions of orthodoxy and heresy, questions related to the boundaries of the canon and the authority of these documents as well as motives for their inclusion or exclusion from the biblical canon.

Form of tuition

Seminar (1 x 3 hrs per week), with introductions, presentations and discussion of source texts as well as secondary literature.

Type of assessment

Participation, presentations and final paper about a case study.

Course reading

- Bart Ehrman, The New Testament and Other Early Christian Writings: A Reader (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998 or later)
- Secondary literature will be made available; costs ca. € 40,--.

Entry requirements

Course objective

Insight in the complex development of Christianity by using an interdisciplinary approach; familiarity with various sources, such as texts, archaeological remains and sociological data, as well as sociological and anthropological theories.

Course content

During the four centuries following the death of Jesus of Nazareth, the movement of his followers developed from an obscure oriental sect into the sole legitimate religion of the Roman empire. The goal of this course is to study and to understand this spectacular development. In order to do so, we study the development of the Christian movements in the context of their surroundings, the Roman world. Followers of Christ will be studied in relation to the religion of the Roman state, contemporary Judaism and so-called mystery cults. In addition, attention will be paid to the social composition of the Christian communities, the appeal of the new cult to women and the role of Christian martyrs in the growth and dissemination of the new faith. Last but not least, the role of Constantine and other Christian emperors during the fourth century will be a central issue. Ancient literary sources (in translation), material remains and secondary literature on the subject will serve as the starting point of this course.

Course objective

Thorough introduction to several important themes in the study of the ancient world. Development of theoretical and methodical approaches, with special attention for interdisciplinary perspectives. Broad knowledge of the ancient world through careful study of primary and secondary sources regarding several important topics.

Course content

Among the three debates which will be treated are: Orientalization from Aegean Perspective (Prent); The Hellenistic World and the Coming of Rome: 220 – 146 BC. (Flinterman). Using these debates, we will deal with methodical and theoretical questions and come to grips with the difficulties of interpreting different types of evidence. What are the developments in a specific debate? Which concepts and what kind of criteria are being used? What are the reasons for stagnation of a debate and what does it take to make progress again?

Form of tuition

Seminar. After an introductory session, each debate will be discussed in four consecutive two-hour sessions. Students are required to actively participate through preparation of questions about the reading material, presenting and discussing the results of their work.

Type of assessment

Written exam (75%) and paper (25%). Marks given on the scale 1 to 10. Exam and paper may not be lower than 5. Final mark must be 6 or higher.

Course reading

To be announced on Blackboard

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course: Ancient Studies, Ancient History, Classics, History, research MA Classics and Ancient Civilizations, research MA History.

Course objective

Thorough introduction to several important themes in the study of the ancient world. Development of theoretical and methodical approaches, with special attention for interdisciplinary perspectives. Broad knowledge of the ancient world through careful study of primary and secondary sources regarding several important topics.

Course content

What do Christianity and ancient mystery cults have in common? Is gender a useful category of historical analysis for the ancient world? Is there a link between Roman political culture and democracy? Each of these themes is topic of fierce debate between ancient historians. These debates will be central to this course. Using these debates, we will deal with methodical and theoretical questions, and come to grips with the difficulties of interpreting different types of source material. What are the developments in a specific debate? Which definitions and what sort of criteria are used? What are the reasons for stagnation of a debate and what does it take to make progress again?

Form of tuition

Seminar. Each debate will be discussed in three consecutive two-hour sessions. Students are required to actively participate through preparation of discussions, oral presentations and written papers, and giving and receiving feedback on said presentations and papers. On each debate a brief paper is written (of 2000 words). In the last session, each student presents a brief outline of his or her term-paper (to be written in period 3); topics may be selected from the debates of Great Debates I and II or from broadly related themes.

Type of assessment

Three written assignments (30% each) and an oral presentation (10%). As a rule, individual assignments may not be resubmitted in order to obtain a higher mark. Only if the final mark is between 5 and 6, the paper which received the lowest mark may be resubmitted after revision; in this case, however, the final mark can never exceed 6.

Course reading

Articles, book chapters, primary sources in translation (to be announced during the course)

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programs can take this course: MA Ancient History, Ancient Studies, or Classics and Ancient Civilizations, Research Master History, Classics and Ancient Civilizations, or Archaeology.

Target group

Course objective

Getting acquainted with Epictetus' Stoic philosophy, with the way in which he deals with his predecessors and with the way in which later generations dealt with his writings

Course content

Epictetus (ca. 50 – ca. 125 A.D.) is one of the three main representatives of the so-called New Stoa. He had a school of Stoic philosophy in Nicopolis (Northwest Greece). He did not compose any works himself. Among his pupils was Arrian, who took notes of his lectures, four books of which have come down to us. The best-known work of Epictetus, however, is the Encheiridion (Handbook or Manual) in which Arrian gives a brief overview of Epictetus' philosophy.

In the extant lectures Epictetus is mainly concerned with ethics. His message is expressed succinctly in chapter 8 of the Encheiridion: "Do not seek to have events happen as you wish, but wish them to happen as they do happen, and all will be well with you." Time and again Epictetus states that it is deeds, not words that count. The theory of Stoic philosophy is not an end in itself but it should be the guide for everyday life.

In many places Epictetus quotes or refers to works of others, both philosophers and non-philosophers. Among the latter, Homer takes up a prominent position. Epictetus uses passages from the poets both in a positive and in a negative sense. Often, he gives a specific twist to a quotation, adapting it to his own argument.

The influence of Epictetus in later times almost exclusively depends on the Encheiridion. This work has been the subject of a bulky commentary by the sixth-century Neoplatonist philosopher Simplicius. The work also strongly appealed to the Christians, as appears from the fact that no less than three Christian adaptations of the Encheiridion have come down to us. One of these adaptations, in its turn, has been the subject of a commentary by an anonymous author. Later reception of Epictetus includes Matteo Ricci's Book of Twenty-Five Sayings composed in Chinese (early 17th century) and the works of Teilhard de Chardin (First World War). The Rational Emotive Therapy by Albert Ellis is ultimately based on Epictetus.

In this course you will get an introduction to Stoic philosophy. A number of texts of Epictetus, both from the lectures and the Encheiridion, will be studied in detail. Special attention will be paid to Epictetus' method of handling quotations. The study of the reception of Epictetus will be started with the lecture of the first two books of the Meditations by the emperor Marcus Aurelius. Next comes Simplicius' commentary. Then, the attention will shift to the Christian world. After an introduction on the monastic life, which was the context in which the adaptations originated, the three adaptations themselves will be studied, as well as the commentary on one of these. To end, we will deal with some chapters in the history of the later reception of Epictetus, ending with Tom Wolfe's magnificent novel A Man in Full (1998).

Course objective

The primary aim of this course is to broaden and deepen your knowledge of one of the central genres of Greek literature: drama. You will also learn how to compare different versions of the same myth, using narratology as an (intertextual) tool.

Course content

In this course you will read a series of texts which all deal with the tragic story of Heracles and Deianira, his wife who wishing to revive his love for her actually poisons him. Our central text is Sophocles Trachiniae, but we will compare the versions of this story in Pindar, Bacchylides, vases, and Ovid. Central research questions will be the influence of the genre (epic, lyric, drama) or the medium (oral, written, visual) on the form and function of the story.

Course objective

The course aims to explore the interrelationships between textual, archaeological and anthropological sources of information. At the end of the course, you will have acquired a more profound knowledge of early Greek culture and will be able to place this in a wider Mediterranean framework.

Course content

In this course we will focus on the interconnections between the Homeric epics and archaeology. In an introductory lecture the research topic and the course's main aims will be defined. During the following two sessions we will discuss the problem of the historicity of the epics. The remainder of the course will be devoted to specific aspects of material culture in the Iliad and Odyssey, more in particular their functioning and socio-cultural significance. Examples of themes that we will discuss are objects and exchanges, social structures, warfare, and death, burial rituals and afterlife. We will also reflect on the connections with the wider Mediterranean world. We will look at, for instance, cultural encounters and aspects of identity (the self vs. the culturally other) in the epics and how these may be related to contemporary 'protocolonial' experiences. A number of times we use video material that offers anthropological comparanda for, for instance, warfare and exchanges in non-Western societies. These archaeological and anthropological insights we will use to analyse parts of the Iliad and Odyssey (in translation).

Form of tuition

Students prepare topics by means of close reading of academic texts and present their viewpoints during weekly plenary discussion sessions and in a short written report (ca. 3 pages). This series of papers provides the basis for writing a final essay in which general conclusions are drawn regarding the interdisciplinary study of the society that produced the Homeric epics.

Type of assessment

Participation in class room discussions and weekly written reports, (short) final essay.

Course reading

Will be made available during the course.

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course : Archaeology (all three programmes) or Classics and Ancient Civilizations (all three programmes)

Target group

Core course for Master students of Mediterranean archaeology, specialisation 'Mediterranean interconnections'; also accessible for Master students Ancient History, Classics and Ancient Civilizations.

Teaching staff	dr. N.M. Vos
Teaching method(s)	Seminar, Lecture
Level	400

Course objective

Acquaintance with ancient conceptions of the divine in various contexts; close reading of key primary texts.

Course content

'Imagining the Divine in Context' focuses on the intellectual history of Greco-Roman literature and philosophy as well as the Jewish and Christian traditions in antiquity. It comprises an interdisciplinary trajectory in which sessions are taught by specialists in philosophy, theology/religious studies and classics. In the course, which also functions as an introduction to the specialisation Ancient Thought ("From Plato to Augustine"), various conceptions of the divine are analysed. Students will become acquainted with the different ways in which Greek philosophers and tragedians as well as Jewish and Christian thinkers mapped out their concepts of G/god, the gods, and the divine realm. In this context, the connections between images of the divine and images of the cosmos, the human condition, ethical and cultic practice will be traced. While the different traditions will be treated in their own right, students are also invited to envisage the relations between Greco-Roman culture, Judaism and Christianity in (late) antiquity. In many ways, these traditions influenced one another, resulting in rich amalgams of thought and practice. Thus, the dynamics of reception and processes of mutual influence figure prominently both in the introductory course and in the specialisation as such.

Form of tuition

Lectures and seminar (2 x 2 hours per week); lectures will be given by scholars from various disciplines within the Amsterdam Center for Ancient Studies and Archaeology.

Type of assessment

Oral presentation (25%), review (25%) and paper (50%).

Course reading

To be announced on blackboard. Costs € 40,-.

Teaching staff	dr. M.H. Koenen, dr. E.M. van Opstall
Teaching method(s)	Seminar
Level	400

Course objective

Detailed insight in the function of the classics in the cultural history of the later 18th, the 19th and the early 20th century; general knowledge of theories of intertextuality and reception; insight into the main forms of reception and intertextuality in and of Virgil, especially from classical antiquity to the 17th century.

Course content

General lectures: The lectures study the changes in concepts of classicism and the classics in western culture from the later 18th Century onwards. This period saw the emergence of romanticism, aesthetics and historicism, all forceful intellectual and cultural impulses that heavily leaned on interpretations of the classics and gave rise to innovations of both the study and the reception of the classics that are still influential today. The lectures aim to show how the discipline we know today as classics came into being in the 19th Century, what role specific forms of reception played in this process, and how concepts of classicism and renaissance affected culture in general.

Seminars: Seminars introduce reception and intertextuality in and of Virgil's Aeneid especially in Late Antiquity, Middle Ages and Renaissance, using as a textbook Philip Hardie's recent study of this subject. After three introductory lectures students will prepare and present presentations following themes set out by Hardie.

Form of tuition

The course consists of 8 weeks of two sessions a week, one a general lecture on the subject of concepts of classicism, especially in the 19th Century, the other a seminar on the subject of intertextuality and reception in and of Virgil's Aeneid.

Type of assessment

Written exam (60%) and presentation with hand-out during the seminar (40%)

Course objective

Upon successful completion of this course, you will:

1. have a deep knowledge of, and insight into the structure and development of Late Iron Age societies in North Western Europe.
2. have an extensive knowledge of the actual debate about the major social changes in Late Iron Age societies as well as of theories and concepts relevant for the explanation of these changes. This course also provides a firm basis for understanding the social and cultural transformation of Celto-Germanic societies after their integration into the Roman empire.

Course content

The course starts with an introductory lecture in which the main research topics and the organisation of the course are outlined. In the following lectures we will discuss specific themes of research, including material culture and the ethnic debate, Oppida and the urbanisation process in pre-Roman Gaul, Diffusion and social role of Iron Age coinage; Cult places and their material culture, Material culture studies: the case of glass La Tène bracelets, Mediterranean connectivity: the wine consumption in Late Iron Age Gaul. The final meetings will be used for the presentation of essays by students. Key concepts: ethnicity, state formation, urbanisation, Laténisation, connectivity with the Mediterranean world.

Form of tuition

Lectures, guest-lectures, class room discussions

Type of assessment

Written essay (70%), participation in class room discussions (10%), oral presentation (20%).

Course reading

Course objective

The goal of this course is to provide the students with linguistic and narrative tools which reveal implicit information. These tools can be found in recent linguistic (semantic and pragmatic) models about negation, and narratological publications about 'possible worlds' within literary texts. Moreover, students improve their knowledge of Latin prose by studying texts of Tacitus and Livy in the first half of the course, and a third author, chosen by the student, may be added for the second half.

Students are trained in high level text analysis skills, by combining narrative, rhetorical and linguistic tools. The 'argumentative' subject of negation combined with narrative texts poses the student for methodological challenges. These will lead to new insights with regard to narratological, rhetorical and linguistic models and their use. The students are trained in advanced academic presentation and critical debate.

Course content

Narrative texts create a literary world governed by rules often similar to the world experienced by the listener. In fact, the listener ('narratee' to use the correct form) co-creates the literary world by unconsciously filling in temporary, spatial and other types of information. Sometimes, the narrator explicitly negates such a presupposed part of the literary world. This course is centered around such instances: what exactly is negated and what does it tell us about the underlying presupposition. Would an affirmative sentence of the opposite have the same effect? And what might be the rhetorical goal behind the use of negations in narrative? Or does narrative transform into argumentation when we find a negation? Definitions of narrative and description seem to exclude the possibility of negated content. This course will sharpen your analytical skills and highen your understanding of definitions of genre and especially narrative. In short, the rhetorical side of narratives is highlighted with this seminar.

Form of tuition

Course objective

Intertextuality is one of the defining characteristics of Latin poetry. The aim of this class is to learn to appreciate the working of intertextuality in a text: what are we as readers supposed to do with the intertextual clues of the text.

Course content

Roman epic flourished during the reign of the Flavian emperors (69-96 AD), witness the fact that four epics have come down to us: Valerius Flaccus' Argonautica, Statius' Achilleis and Thebais, and Silius Italicus' Punica. Whereas these epic poets were often neglected and seen as mere epigones of Virgil, their poems are currently enjoying an exciting revival. More and more, it is becoming clear that Flavian epic had its own voice and agenda. This seminar will focus on the first of these epics (which was probably written during Vespasian's reign) to see what challenges Valerius Flaccus faced as he tried to find his own place in the long epic tradition. How did he deal with his predecessors? With Apollonius of Rhodes' Hellenistic epic on the same topic, with Virgil's classic Aeneid, and with that epic's iconoclastic successors: Ovid's Metamorphoses and Lucan's Bellum Civile? And how did the other Flavian epics react to Valerius' attempts? Other topics to be dealt with in this seminar include Valerius' peculiar epic style, the enigmatic incompleteness and ending of the poem, its reception in later times, and the way the epic reflects the cultural and political context of Flavian Rome.

Form of tuition

Type of assessment

The final score for the course is based on (1) participation in classroom discussion (20%), (2) individual presentation and final written paper (50%), (3) oral examination of individual reading list (30%).

Course objective

The aim of the course is to produce insight in ancient literary criticism in general and Horace's Ars Poetica in particular from a dual perspective: synchronical and diachronical. Acquiring expertise in reading the text and relevant subtexts is a key activity, both individually and in class. Students are to write and present papers based on individual research. Eventually they will be able to place the AP in its cultural and literary context, comment on its structure and content, as well as explain why and how its influence has been so enormous, and what this influence amounts to. Finally candidates should be able to confront the issues raised by Horace with modern artistic practice.

Course content

Besides reading the Latin texts of the AP and Ep. 2.1, relevant passages in Horace and other authors will be read in translation. Structure and dating of the AP will be treated. Poetical theory in general (Homer, Plato, Aristotle, Hellenistic poets) will be confronted with the AP, and the extent to which generic topoi influence its nature. We will look at contemporary poetological discourse in Longinus and Dionysius of Halicarnassus, but also at literary letters. The addressees will receive our attention, and possible inferences from their identification for the interpretation of the text. Also, cultural practice in literature, architecture and visual art will be compared to the tenets of the AP. The sociology of art, the function of the arts in the Augustan 'programme' will be studied. Especially the themes of poetic unity, decorum and imitatio will be closely analysed. All these themes will enable us to answer the question to what extent the AP is 'original' and how it functions in contemporary artistic discourse. Diachronically speaking, this text has been the foundation of classicism. We will follow its reception from late Antiquity (Acron, Porphyrio), via the High Renaissance (Landino, Inghirami, Vida) to classicism (Jonson, Boileau, Vossius) and Romanticism (Shelley). Finally we will confront the AP with recent discussion on the arts.

Form of tuition

2 hours lectures, 2 hours seminar per week

Entry requirements

Servicable Latin, historical knowledge of the Augustan Age

Course objective

Overview of ancient theories of beauty and truth and of the interrelation between the two.

In order to successfully complete this course, the student needs to:

- acquire knowledge of several ancient theories of beauty and of truth;
- gain insight into ancient views of the interrelation between beauty and truth, and of the metaphysical and epistemological presuppositions underlying those views;
- further develop the skills of textual analysis, by learning how to reflect on and compare the theories expounded in (ancient) texts (in translation); evaluating secondary literature on those texts; formulating your own questions on and analyses of the material.

Course content

Beauty is truth. Beauty is order. Truth is identity. Such equations are common in ancient thought, from the Presocratics down to the late ancient commentators. How are they to be understood? We will trace the development of the notions of beauty and truth and study their entrenchment in ideas concerning the nature of reality and knowledge.

Form of tuition

A combination of lecture and discussion, on the basis of close reading of primary texts.

Type of assessment

Biweekly written assignments (20%), a presentation (10%) and a final paper ca. 3500 words on a relevant topic of your choice (70%).

Course reading

A selection of passages from primary texts (mainly Plato, Aristotle, Stoa, Plotinus, Proclus) as well as papers and chapters from secondary literature, details to be announced through Blackboard.

Entry requirements

Philosophy students can follow this course as a specialization course, after obtaining permission from the Examination board.

Remarks

This course will be taught in English unless all participating students have both active and passive knowledge of Dutch.

Absence of more than 20% will have to be compensated through additional assignments, except in cases of illness or other extreme circumstances.

Course objective

The main objectives of this course are:

- knowledge: acquiring knowledge of different views of the nature and limitations of historiography of philosophy
- insight: developing insight in the difficulties involved in writing a history of philosophy
- skills:

applying the above theories to a case study; developing your own views on the nature of historiography of philosophy

Course content

What would Plato think of our presentation of his theory of Forms? Would Aristotle understand today's metaphysics and find it useful? Historians of philosophy only rarely stop to think what it means to write a history of philosophy. How do we demarcate the field of philosophy through the ages? Which factors influence how we read past philosophers? Do we work on the assumption of intellectual progress? Can we rely on some sort of continuity in the development of philosophical notions? These and similar questions will be addressed.

Form of tuition

Primarily discussion, on the basis of close reading of literature on the topic and an ancient philosophical text by way of case study. The relevant literature will have to be studied before each class. Active participation is required.

Type of assessment

Course objective

You will acquire a diachronic overview over a literary genre often described as a problematic one. You will be able to participate in scholarly debates on a body of fascinating texts in Latin from (Late) Antiquity and the Middle Ages.

Course content

Boethius' Consolatio Philosophiae and Dante's Vita Nuova, both famous works by canonized authors, stand out by their alternation of prose and poetry. While being an uncommon format in both ancient and modern literature in the Western world, this 'mixed form' – often dubbed 'menippean' (the medieval term is 'prosimetrum') – is found with influential writers like Petronius (1st century), Martianus Capella (5th century), and Alan of Lille (12th century). Moreover, the combination of prose and poetry within one text doesn't seem to be unusual at all, if seen from a global perspective. This course will be devoted to a few appealing and intriguing examples of the genre.

Form of tuition

Seminar 2 x 2 hours weekly, excursion

Type of assessment

Oral exam (50%) and presentation (50%).

Course reading

- Boethius, The Theological Tractates, The Consolation of Philosophy, ed. Stewart, Rand & Tester, Loeb Classical Library nr. 74
- Alan of Lille, Literary Works, ed. W. Wetherbee, Dumbarton Oaks medieval Library
- Costs books: ca. € 50; excursion ca. € 100 (there may be some subsidy)

Level	400

Course objective

Upon successful completion of this course, you will: have acquired a general knowledge of the western discourse on the 'transformative powers' of money in (Ancient and Medieval) society; have acquired an extensive view of the key themes in the debate on the use of money in Ancient and Medieval societies; have learned to take your own position in the debate on these topics; have learned to make use of different types of evidence and combine them in synthetical research; understand how to apply different methodologies to different kinds of research questions; be able to design and conduct your own research in a case study of your choice and write a paper on it.

Course content

Money has always been regarded as having a profound impact on the societies which made use of it. This course is focused on the emergence and spread of money in Ancient and Medieval societies, and its wide repertoires of use. This will be treated from the perspective of several 'hot issues' in economic and numismatic research regarding societies our archaeological departments cover: monetization and its impact on the economy and society; the structure of governmental finance in Classical Athens and the Roman Empire, banks and the role of credit, ritual use of money, money and propaganda and the impact of Roman money on societies in the northwestern Empire. The selected themes are intended to give a as wide as possible scope on the vastness of numismatic research and archaeological and historical research involving coinage, and serve simultaneously as case studies for different methodological approaches used in this field. Special attention will be paid to the use of quantitative methods, anthropological theories of money and the use of various source materials: archaeological evidence (coins and other material culture) and ancient texts (literary texts and epigraphy).

Form of tuition

Lectures provided by teacher, class room discussions.

Type of assessment

Participation in class room discussion (including small written assignments (40%), written essay (60%).

Course reading

Will be made available at the beginning of the course.

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course : Archaeology (all three programmes) or Classics and Ancient Civilizations (all three programmes).

Target group

Course for all Archaeology Master students. Also accessible for Master students Ancient History, Medieval History, Ancient Cultures and Classics.

Course objective

- Understanding of theoretical concepts and approaches in current landscape research: processual, interpretative, phenomenological concepts
- Understanding of science-based concepts of landscape research: geomorphology and soil system sciences
- Competence in applying these combined concepts and approaches to specific case studies in European and Near Eastern Archaeology

Course content

The course focuses on the following key issues and research questions:

- How do we look at past landscapes within an archaeological framework?
- What characterizes the different methodological -like new processual, phenomenological, hermeneutic and Annaliste- approaches in landscape archaeology?
- What are the underlying concepts? What is the contribution of natural and cultural processes to the end product 'landscape'?
- How do we apply these approaches in our own research?

These issues and questions are discussed with the help of cases taken from Northwest-European, Scandinavian and Mediterranean archaeology.

Form of tuition

Short lectures, interactive class room discussions and assignments, student presentations, guest-lectures, Skype-lectures.

Type of assessment

Written assignments (30%), oral presentations (30%), and intermediate tests (40%)

Course reading

Will be made available during the course. Extended PowerPoint presentations available on Blackboard.

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course: Archaeology (all three programmes) or Classics and Ancient Civilizations (all three programmes). Additional reading assignments will apply to deficiencies.

Target group

Obligatory Course for Master students Specialisation Landscape Archaeology (Landscape and Heritage), Elective Course for ACASA programs: Mediterranean Archaeology, Archaeology of Northwestern Europe, Landscape and Heritage. Also accessible to Master students Ancient History and Ancient Cultures, Geo-archaeology, and Earth Sciences.

Level	600

Course objective

The aim of the course is twofold: the students will learn how to read philosophical texts, on the one hand and on the other, learn how to follow the historical and conceptual development of a philosophical idea.

The student:

- acquires a fundamental knowledge of the philosophical themes related to and implied by the concept of possibility and/or potentiality in the texts and the authors under consideration (Aristotle, some of the Neoplatonic thinkers in both the Greek and the Arabic traditions, Avicenna and Thomas Aquinas).
- develops a general understanding of the main conceptual issues related to the topic of possibility and/or potentiality (e.g. the notions of becoming and being, possibility and necessity, and creation and divine power).
- acquires the skills of reflecting on philosophical texts (in translation), formulating their own questions, analysing and elaborating philosophical arguments (e.g. drawing conclusions, indicating conceptual difficulties in the texts, and critically evaluating philosophical positions).

Course content

Related to the ideas of capacity, faculty and power (virtus), potency is in Aristotle's philosophy, together with the concept of act (energeia, entelecheia), the key to explaining movement and becoming. Moreover, since "potency and actuality extend beyond the cases that involve a reference to motion" - everything except the First Principle can be explained in terms of becoming -, the concept of potency (in Greek dynamis) can be used not only to explain physical causality, but also to clarify elements pertaining to ethics and psychology and – of primary importance – to metaphysics.

During the course two main directions will be followed: on the one hand, we will examine the concept of potency by considering Aristotle's discussion of it in his Metaphysics, in V, 7 and 12, VII, 7, 8, 9, Phys. I, 7, 8 and IX (possibly also De an., II, 5 and III, 4-6 will be analysed). On the other, we will follow the course of the concept of potency in its historical development, examining some of the pre-Aristotelian (the Megarians and Plato) and the post-Aristotelian developments (Plotinus, the Arabic Plotinus, Yahya ibn 'Ad, Avicenna, and finally, some texts of Thomas Aquinas).

Form of tuition

Almost each lecture will include the careful reading of a philosophical text and a critical discussion about it.

Type of assessment

Assignment (30 %); written exam (a paper, 70%)

The text will be read and analyzed during the classes. Attendance is therefore obligatory (at least 80% attendance is required) because it is necessary to the realization of the aim of the course.

Course reading

The bibliography and a more detailed description will be available on Blackboard before the beginning of the course.

Remarks

A general knowledge of the history of ancient and medieval Philosophy is an advantage but not a prerequisite.

Teaching method(s)	Seminar
Level	400

Course objective

Upon successful completion of this course, you will:

1. have acquired a profound knowledge of key positions within the long-lived academic debate on cultural changes within the multi-cultural context of the Roman empire ('romanisation') and the theoretical foundations thereof;
2. have learned to define and defend a position of your own in this debate in both oral and written form;
3. have acquired a basic understanding of the diverse mechanisms that directed the process of cultural change among various groups and societies under Roman rule;
4. have acquired a profound knowledge of the immense cultural differences the impact of Roman rule had on the communities of the empire
5. have acquired some ability to connect the debate on cultural change in the Roman empire with discussions on identity, inclusion and cultural change in contemporary society.

Course content

One of the key issues of Roman archaeology is to describe and explain the cultural changes that took place in the communities that had been absorbed by the Roman empire. Related to this issue is the question as to how the Roman empire was able to keep together a world empire consisting of many different people and ethnicities with as many different traditions for so long. Over the past two centuries, generations of ancient historians and archaeologists have tried to provide answers to these central questions of the discipline, taking very different sometimes conflicting and often contested, positions. This course begins with an opening lecture in which the aims of the course are set out and a first global overview of the problem is presented. During the second class the obligatory course reading will be discussed. For the following classes, each participant will have to prepare an oral presentation on one or more key publications in the debate. The reading material will cover all parts of the empire, the northwestern and Mediterranean provinces as well as Italy. At the end of the course all participants will have to submit a paper using a case study from a particular region of the empire.

Form of tuition

Lectures, class room discussions

Type of assessment

Participation in class room discussions (10%), oral presentation (30%), written essay (60%).

Teaching staff	dr. E. van Staalduine-Sulman, prof. dr. L.J. Lietaert Peerbolte
Teaching method(s)	Seminar
Level	500

Course objective

After this course, the student has the following skills:

- Introduction (Dublin descriptor a,b,e): about the student is acquainted with the genre of apocalyptic literature and its theological influence in later Christianity and is able to analyse this genre and its influence;

- Exegesis (Dd b,c): read and interpret apocalyptic sections of biblical and non-canonical sources of the same period in a way that shows a scholarly understanding of the relevant texts;
- Interests (Dd b,c,d): analyze the symbolic language and the literary structures of apocalyptic literature, and grasp the theological interests of the source(s) studied;
- Justice (Dd c,d): situate the sources studied in this course in their religious and social contexts, and give a scholarly evaluation of the idea of 'revelation';
- Learning (Dd e): find and use/apply adequate literature to finish his paper properly;
- Nota bene: all these skills and competences are shown by the participants in this course in their presentations in class as well as their final paper.

Course content

This course offers an introduction to apocalyptic literature of Israel, early Judaism, and early Christianity, studies the impact of apocalypticism on the rise of Christianity, and focuses on the apocalyptic context of the idea of 'revelation'. The student will be introduced to early Judaism, and become acquainted with a number of its sources. In separate groups Old and New Testament students will read each time a part of these sources that is of special interest for either Old or New Testament.

Form of tuition

Lectures on the introductions to the ancient sources, including secondary literature on them, followed by the reading of a number of primary sources. (This will partly have to be done from translations, since many sources have been transmitted in quite exotic languages).

Type of assessment

Formative

1. Write an introductory essay on the formation of the genre of apocalyptic literature in which you situate this literature in its historical context.
2. Presentations on the various sources within class sessions.
3. Study one source text in particular, to be selected from the list of texts that will be available on Blackboard when this course starts.

Summative

4. All students keep track of the classes by writing a summary of every session. Thus a portfolio is built, which should be added to the general introduction (see above, 1).
5. To this portfolio the student adds a paper in which (s)he discusses the chosen source text, its main theological motifs, and evaluates the theological position taken in the source text of her/his choice.

Course reading

Bibliographical data and several articles will be put on Blackboard.

Obligatory literature:

John J. Collins, The Apocalyptic Imagination. An Introduction to Jewish Apocalyptic Literature (Grand Rapids, Cambridge UK: Eerdmans, 2nd ed., 1998).

Some useful books are:

Teaching method(s)	Seminar
Level	500

Course objective

In his paper, the student shows that he is able to:

- describe the most important versions and early commentaries of the Bible in their historical context, including their connection to both Old and New Testament (Dublin descriptor a,b,e);
- apply this knowledge to his explanation of the sources in a way that introduction to and exegesis of the source strongly relate to each other (Dd b,e);
- discern and evaluate textual variants in the various ancient versions (Dd a,b,c);
- create an overview of the growth of the meaning of an OT section that is quoted in a NT section (until 600 CE) (Dd b,c);
- make an analysis of the interests of the authors or translators and the mechanisms used within the exegesis/translation to achieve those interests (Dd b,c,d);
- describe his own interests in exegesis and to formulate where these interests do (not) concur with those of the ancient authors (Dd c,d,e);
- explain opinions from the sources as meaningful in their context in a way that does justice to these opinions (Dd c,d);
- (Dd e): find specialized and scientific literature (i.e.

scientific chapters or articles concerning the author and source, and preferably about the text at hand itself) to finish his paper properly.

Course content

The core of the course consists of introductions to the most important Jewish and Christian versions and commentaries of the Bible (until the 6th century CE) and their value for both Old and New Testament studies: Septuagint, Theodotion, Aquila, Symmachus, Itala, Vetus Latina, Vulgate, Flavius Josephus, Qumran versions, Targums, Peshitta, Coptic version, Mekhilta, Midrashim, Mishnah, and several Church Fathers.

Form of tuition

Lectures on the introductions to the ancient sources, including secondary literature on them.

Exercises on how to read and use ancient texts for textual criticism, exegesis and reception history.

Type of assessment

Formative (30%)

1. Logbook about the chosen sections of OT and NT, the chosen sources, the first impression on these sections and sources, and literature about these sections and sources. Delivered on a weekly basis (first plan; full plan; introduction literature and reflection; OT exegesis; NT exegesis; etc).

2. Presentations on the various sources within the workshops.

Summative (70%)

Paper about an OT section that is used in the NT, in which is analyzed and evaluated what meaning the OT section carries in the different sources:

- OT, LXX and NT
- and two other sources as desired (on either the OT section or the NT)

Every student includes a short introduction to the chosen sources.

Every student adds a paragraph about his own interests and aims in exegetical enterprises.

The Archaeological Heritage of the Medieval and Early Modern Town

Course code	L_AAMAARC001 ()
Period	Period 1
Credits	6.0
Language of tuition	English
Faculty	Faculteit der Geesteswetenschappen (Let)
Coordinator	prof. dr. N.G.A.M. Roymans
Teaching method(s)	Seminar
Level	400

Course objective

After this course you will:

- have an insight into the origin and development of the medieval town in Europe
- have a more specific knowledge of the urban landscape in the Netherlands
- be able to relate archaeological research to general
- be able to formulate ideas for archaeological research within medieval towns
- have an insight into the origin and development of early modern industry cities, both in the UK, and beyond

Course content

This module covers a wide expanse of time, from the development of towns in the Roman period until the early modern period. We will study the decline of urban life in the late-Roman period and see how the Roman past structured medieval developments. The topography of early medieval proto-urban settlements is discussed as well as their religious and economic functions. During the Carolingian period Dorestad was the hub in an international network of trading settlements or early towns. The functioning of this network is assessed as well as its relevance for the growth of towns in the later middle ages. Special attention is paid to the large-scale urban expansion which took place in the later middle ages, when the society and economy saw a profound transformation. Conceptual frameworks in the study of urbanism are subject of the module as well as specific urban research topics as cesspits or artisanal production. Developments in the Low Countries are placed in a general European perspective, and the course material draws upon recent work in the UK, the USA, and Australia, to examine early industrial cities and the growth of industrial societies. Seminars focus on individual or of groups of towns and provide case studies against which general developments can be evaluated. Visiting lecturers from the Netherlands will present results from the research conducted in their town.

Form of tuition

Formal lectures and seminars and an excursion

Type of assessment

Exams.

Oral and written reports, final essay. In the final assignment you will recapitulate the main points of the module. Furthermore you will select a town or group of towns to assess origins and development of the town, the contribution of archaeology and the potential to answer specific research questions. Most literature discussed in the module should show up in the final assignment.

- Size, between 7000 and 8000 words (footnotes and bibliography excluded);
- Complete with relevant figures;
- Annotation and bibliography conform the archaeological standards

Course reading

Course objective

Upon successful completion of this course, you will have acquired a thorough knowledge of the organizational structure of Dutch archaeology; have developed your own view on the positive and negative effects of the so-called Malta archaeology and a vision on the directions in which Dutch archaeology should evolve; have learned to place Dutch archaeology in an European perspective; be able to write an archaeological policy plan for a municipality; have learned to work with ARCHISII.

Course content

In the past two decades the face of field archaeology in Europe has undergone revolutionary changes, as a result of the so-called Malta-treaty. In the case of Dutch archaeology, the treaty has been implemented in the law regarding Cultural Heritage in 2007. The workings of this new law has been evaluated by the department of Education, Culture and Science (OCW), which shows the state of flux which Dutch archaeology is experiencing currently. Currently, and as a consequence of the neo-liberal retreatment of state involvement, the law is being restructured. This course teaches students the organizational structure of present Dutch archaeology through discussion and practical research assignments, and invites students to develop their own critical vision on the development of modern Dutch archaeology, amongst other things by comparing it with recently developing systems in other European countries . Also it provides the students with a first experience in writing a archaeological policy plan, trying to mediate between archaeological values and local municipal politics.

Form of tuition

Lectures provided by teacher, class room discussions.

Type of assessment

Participation in class room discussions (20%), written essay (80%). Students will individually work on a desk-based research for an archaeological policy plan using ARCHIS and other research tools. At the end of the course students will present their research in the form of a written plan which can be used for the implementation of concrete measures a municipality (or group of municipalities) can take regarding their archaeological heritage.

Course reading

Will be made available at the beginning of the course.

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course : Archaeology (all three programmes) or Classics and Ancient Civilizations (all three programmes), Heritage Studies.

Target group

Course for all Archaeology Master students. Also accessible for Master students Ancient History, Medieval History, Ancient Cultures and Classics.

Remarks

Teaching method(s)	Seminar, Lecture
Level	400

Course objective

To acquire knowledge on the material culture of Amsterdam on the basis of archaeological sites and finds.

To get an overview of the successive periods of topographical growth and development of the city of Amsterdam in the period 1175-2011 in relation to political, religious, social and cultural factors of interest.

To develop an insight in the interaction between the urban development of Amsterdam and Dutch maritime expansion activities, especially from an archaeological point of view (urban archaeology, maritime archaeology).

To gain experience with the multidisciplinary method of urban archaeology, using and combining different data sources

Course content

Amsterdam is a relatively young city which in a short time managed to evolve from a small 14th-century town to a sophisticated urban community with a global network in the 17th century. It was a city in constant change, growing, rebuilding and taking in new residents from near and afar. Farmers came from the countryside, sailors from coastal areas, and hopeful immigrants flocked to Amsterdam from cities both within and outside its region. This urban development is much more than a building process, it is the outcome of political, economic, social, religious and cultural interactions.

The urban growth of Amsterdam will be discussed and studied in nine phases, in 1175-2011 covering the topography and spatial organisation of the city as a starting point. The historical urban process will be examined with archaeological data of sites and finds. Particular emphasis will be given on ceramic finds that have been excavated on c. 213 sites in Amsterdam and offer an evocative and versatile impression of everyday domestic utensils. Also included will be the multidisciplinary use of sources in modern urban archaeology.

Form of tuition

The course starts with an introductory lecture on the basic urban characteristics of Amsterdam and the interactive approach of urban archaeology using material culture and sites in a topographical and chronological context. In the following sessions the different periods of city development of Amsterdam will be presented in concordance with the ceramic spectrum and basic archaeological data on each period. In a number of sessions the students will be introduced to other datasets and institutions which are vital for urban archaeology (like cartography, archival and museum collections)

Type of assessment

Oral and written reports, final exam and essay

Course reading

- 4.) have the ability to write a concise and clearly structured paper with a well-focused argument.

Course content

This course focuses on the interpretation of material culture from sanctuaries in Etruria, Republican Rome and Italy, and the Mediterranean provinces of the Roman empire. Most finds from these sanctuaries will have played a role in the religious communication between man and god. While it thus may be assumed that many finds had a strong symbolic dimension, excavation reports often do not reach beyond basic descriptions of the finds themselves. In the introductory lecture to the course, several competing models of interpretation will be presented and a methodology that might help us to decipher the codes of the material culture from sanctuaries will be discussed. This will be followed by two meetings where we will discuss theoretical literature on the anthropology of religion and on the religion of Etruria and Rome. The remaining meetings will be used for oral presentations in which students present their own interpretation of a pre-selected site. All participants subsequently write an essay on the subject of their oral presentation.

Form of tuition

Lectures, class room discussions and oral presentations with discussion and feedback from the instructors.

Type of assessment

Oral presentation, participation in class room discussions, final essay.

Course reading

Will be made available during the course.

Entry requirements

Students admitted to one of the following Master's programmes can take this course : Archaeology (all three programmes) or Classics and Ancient Civilizations (all three programmes)

Target group

Thesis Classics and Ancient Civilizations

Course code	L_OAMAOHSSCR ()
Period	Ac. Year (September)
Credits	18.0
Language of tuition	Dutch
Faculty	Faculteit der Geesteswetenschappen (Let)
Coordinator	prof. dr. N.G.A.M. Roymans
Examinator	prof. dr. N.G.A.M. Roymans
Level	400

Course objective

The aim is to carry out research into a specialized subject or theme taken from the field of Classics and Ancient Civilizations, leading to a written presentation of the results. This thesis will provide proof of the student's capability to conduct research according to academic standards and capacity to develop his or her own view of how to deal with primary data.

Course content

The subject and content of the thesis are defined in consultation with the supervisor. The student is required to contact one of the staffmembers whose field of research best fits the type of research to be carried out. A second supervisor will be approached afterwards.

Form of tuition

In a series of one to one sessions, the supervisor gives feedback to the student. As a first step, the student defines his or her research topic. When this is approved of by one of the staff members, it is determined which staff members will act as a supervisor and second examiner, respectively.

Type of assessment

The thesis will be assessed by two staff members, who will together mark the thesis. Important criteria are originality, argumentation, style of writing, adequate references to source material and secondary literature, and -if relevant- the use of illustrations.

Course reading

To be announced

Entry requirements

Bachelor degree (cf. admission rules)

Target group

MA students

Remarks

Start consultation of staffmembers in the first semester.

Transformations of the Medieval Rural World: Landscapes and Settlements

Course code	L_AAMAARC003 ()
Period	Period 2
Credits	6.0
Language of tuition	English
Faculty	Faculteit der Geesteswetenschappen (Let)
Coordinator	prof. dr. N.G.A.M. Roymans
Teaching method(s)	Seminar
Level	400

Course objective

After this course the student will

- be able to present a general overview of the history of habitation of the major regions in the Netherlands on the basis of archaeological sites
- have knowledge on the developments of the physical landscape of the Netherlands during the last two millennia
- have an insight into subsistence strategies from the late-Roman period into the early modern age
- be able to understand the regional variation in material culture as house plans, ceramics and the like
- be able to put the Dutch developments into a broader European perspective

Course content

Most archaeological research over the past decades in the Netherlands concerns settlements from the medieval period. This module focusses on these rural settlements, whereas another module is oriented towards the archaeology of towns. The developments of rural settlements displays a marked variation in western Europe as a whole and in the Netherlands in particular. Settlements were in a constant process of transformation with respect to their location, layout and material culture. One of the goals of this module is to get a grip on the regional differentiation within the Low Countries and to evaluate the causes of the variation. Because settlements cannot be studied apart from the landscapes in which they were situated, landscape dynamics form an important part of the module as well. We will also put the Dutch developments in a European context, by studying other regions in northwestern Europe.
